

DAILY COURIER.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Daily Courier per year, $3.00 Daily Courier for the month, 50 cents Daily Courier for the month less than 1 year, 30 cents per month.
Daily Courier for the month, 25 cents per week.
Daily Courier for the month, 20 cents per week.
Daily Courier for the month, 15 cents per week.
Daily Courier for the month, 10 cents per week.
Four months, 100 cents per month.
Four months, 100 cents per month.
Twenty months, 100 cents per month.
No paper ever sent unless paid for in advance.

LOUISVILLE.

WEDNESDAY MORNING JULY 17.

For State Treasurer,
GOBRIAS TERRY, of Todd.

Vandalian's Speech.
The people of Kentucky will think us of laying before them the great speech of Hon. G. L. VANDALIN, of Ohio, on the Loan Bill, delivered on Wednesday last week, in the House of Representatives.

A citizen of a Free State, and the Representative of a Northern constituency, Mr.
VANDALIN, faithful among the friends of slaves, and loyal to the Constitution when almost all others are false, stands up among the scoundrels who through the Representatives Hall to obey the will of the usurper and in hearing of the hired soldiers who have sworn to obey the President, and in language worthy of Burke or Chatham denounces the usurpations of the President and the violations of the Constitution by the Administration, and enters his solemn protest against the overthrow of Constitutional Government and the subdilution of the "enemies of the country," who have brought distress, suffering, ruin, and woe on a people lately the freest and happiest on earth.

Mr. VANDALIN has simply done his duty as an American Representative; but such is the degeneracy of the times, and such the recency of men high in position, that this is worthy of praise, for in doing his duty, he stood almost alone.

He has gallantly contended the cause of the Constitution, and raised an earnest and manly voice in behalf of the Liberties and rights of the people; and for this let the people applaud him.

The Freedom of the Press—A Real Despotism.

Our readers are aware of the facts concerning the forcible suppression of the St.
Louis Journal, by a body of armed soldiers —an act of despotism which finds no parallel in the records of the countries of the Old World.

So far, we have not seen one avowed Black Republican paper that condemns the outrage.

Indeed, the friends of the Administration almost universally approve the flagrant violation of the Federal Constitution.

The Louisville Democrat even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought that "laws and constitutions don't amount to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his right to suspend either or both at his own good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in this Government."

As we have little right to expect that this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday, the Administration will have to look elsewhere for these men, and their moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in free countries should inspire the conduct of their citizens, and in administering to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of
despotism, even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism."

The Louisville Democrat even, while de-
nouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought
that "laws and constitutions don't amount
to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his
right to suspend either or both at his own
good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in
this Government."

As we have little right to expect that
this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday,
the Administration will have to look
elsewhere for these men, and their
moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of
the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the
writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits
of thinking in free countries should inspire the conduct of their citizens, and in administering to confine themselves within
their respective constitutional spheres,
avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of
despotism, even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of des-
potism."

The Louisville Democrat even, while de-
nouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought
that "laws and constitutions don't amount
to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his
right to suspend either or both at his own
good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in
this Government."

As we have little right to expect that
this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday,
the Administration will have to look
elsewhere for these men, and their
moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of
the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the
writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits
of thinking in free countries should inspire the conduct of their citizens, and in administering to confine themselves within
their respective constitutional spheres,
avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of
despotism, even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of des-
potism."

The Louisville Democrat even, while de-
nouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought
that "laws and constitutions don't amount
to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his
right to suspend either or both at his own
good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in
this Government."

As we have little right to expect that
this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday,
the Administration will have to look
elsewhere for these men, and their
moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of
the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the
writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits
of thinking in free countries should inspire the conduct of their citizens, and in administering to confine themselves within
their respective constitutional spheres,
avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of
despotism, even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of des-
potism."

The Louisville Democrat even, while de-
nouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought
that "laws and constitutions don't amount
to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his
right to suspend either or both at his own
good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in
this Government."

As we have little right to expect that
this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday,
the Administration will have to look
elsewhere for these men, and their
moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of
the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the
writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits
of thinking in free countries should inspire the conduct of their citizens, and in administering to confine themselves within
their respective constitutional spheres,
avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of
despotism, even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of des-
potism."

The Louisville Democrat even, while de-
nouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought
that "laws and constitutions don't amount
to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his
right to suspend either or both at his own
good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in
this Government."

As we have little right to expect that
this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday,
the Administration will have to look
elsewhere for these men, and their
moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of
the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the
writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits
of thinking in free countries should inspire the conduct of their citizens, and in administering to confine themselves within
their respective constitutional spheres,
avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of
despotism, even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of des-
potism."

The Louisville Democrat even, while de-
nouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought
that "laws and constitutions don't amount
to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his
right to suspend either or both at his own
good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in
this Government."

As we have little right to expect that
this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday,
the Administration will have to look
elsewhere for these men, and their
moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of
the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the
writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits
of thinking in free countries should inspire the conduct of their citizens, and in administering to confine themselves within
their respective constitutional spheres,
avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of
despotism, even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of des-
potism."

The Louisville Democrat even, while de-
nouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought
that "laws and constitutions don't amount
to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his
right to suspend either or both at his own
good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in
this Government."

As we have little right to expect that
this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday,
the Administration will have to look
elsewhere for these men, and their
moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of
the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the
writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits
of thinking in free countries should inspire the conduct of their citizens, and in administering to confine themselves within
their respective constitutional spheres,
avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of
despotism, even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of des-
potism."

The Louisville Democrat even, while de-
nouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought
that "laws and constitutions don't amount
to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his
right to suspend either or both at his own
good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in
this Government."

As we have little right to expect that
this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday,
the Administration will have to look
elsewhere for these men, and their
moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of
the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the
writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits
of thinking in free countries should inspire the conduct of their citizens, and in administering to confine themselves within
their respective constitutional spheres,
avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of
despotism, even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of des-
potism."

The Louisville Democrat even, while de-
nouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought
that "laws and constitutions don't amount
to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his
right to suspend either or both at his own
good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in
this Government."

As we have little right to expect that
this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday,
the Administration will have to look
elsewhere for these men, and their
moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of
the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the
writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits
of thinking in free countries should inspire the conduct of their citizens, and in administering to confine themselves within
their respective constitutional spheres,
avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of
despotism, even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of des-
potism."

The Louisville Democrat even, while de-
nouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought
that "laws and constitutions don't amount
to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his
right to suspend either or both at his own
good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in
this Government."

As we have little right to expect that
this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday,
the Administration will have to look
elsewhere for these men, and their
moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of
the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the
writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

"It is important, likewise, that the habits
of thinking in free countries should inspire the conduct of their citizens, and in administering to confine themselves within
their respective constitutional spheres,
avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of
despotism, even, while denouncing it as one of the last acts of des-
potism."

The Louisville Democrat even, while de-
nouncing it as one of the last acts of despotism, avowed itself with the thought
that "laws and constitutions don't amount
to much" since LINCOLN has asserted his
right to suspend either or both at his own
good will and pleasure, and hopes that
"hereafter this shall not be a precedent in
this Government."

As we have little right to expect that
this matter, further than to mention an important fact which has come to our knowledge
since we referred to the subject yesterday,
the Administration will have to look
elsewhere for these men, and their
moral and spiritual influence, will be
of little value to us.

If we submit to such acts of despotism,
why should future Presidents dread resistance to similar invasions of the rights of
the people?

If ABRAHAM LINCOLN may suspend the
writ of habeas corpus and abridge the freedom of the press, the express provisions of the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding,
what limit may his successor set
to his acts of despotism?

Said the great WASHINGTON:

SECOND EDITION

LOUISVILLE.

WEDNESDAY MORNING..... JULY 17.

MILITARY.

(All notices published under this heading will be charged five cents per line—payable in advance.)

WANTED FOR THE SOUTHERN ARMY—50 more men, Cavalry, Arms, double-barrel shot guns, a large quantity to be worn in battle.

Those who will put up a premium for them, to be sent to the State of Kentucky, will have an audience with the State Rights Committee by letter to D. F. H., of Gulf Head, Louisville, Ky., July 17.

Another Step.

As we predicted when Mr. Surveyor COTTON began the enforcement of the embargo of the trade of Louisville that they would do, the servants here of the Administration have taken a step forward, and now the trucks of travelers are searched at the Louisville and Nashville Railroad depot, and detained at the will of the depots of Chase's subordinates.

Because goods of some description are suspected to have been sent through to the Confederate States in transit, carpet bags, Mr. COTTON, himself a post office of the Administration, deems it necessary to exercise surveillance over the baggage of travelers as he thinks proper.

There are laws here for this; it is true that the apologists for the Administration can make no argument in defense of this interference with gentlemen's baggage; it is true, it is an exercise of pure tyranny that has brought down on the old world despotism, the anathemas of all Americans who have been abroad; but what cares the Usurper for that? Hasn't he suspended the Constitution? Hasn't he set aside the laws? Hasn't he nullified the decisions of the Courts? Doesn't he command—Twelve Yankees killed and many taken prisoners.

[Correspondence of the Petersburg Express.]

CAMP CAROLINA, NORFOLK, July 1.

Dear Express.—The commandant of men from the Second North Carolina Regiment alluded to by your correspondent "Ingo," in Tuesday's Express, has been heard from. The detached companies of five men, who are the ten companies of the regiment, fifty in all, and were under charge of Lieut. Seppar of the Warren Guards. They were sent to Norfolk, N. C., for the purpose of getting supplies, and were captured, which had been wrecked, from a British vessel, and which ships were often seen closely watching.

The commandant, who said that after the coffee had been removed from the British vessel to our steamer, it was attacked by 200 Yankees in a brisk engagement, all of whom were killed, and a large number taken prisoners. The remainder who landed, are wandering about the woods like scared sheep, and our boys are hunting them in every direction.

Our men received no serious injury. Private Tyler, of the 1st Co., 1st Grays, was a good warrior from a gray horse. We are told that Commissary Arrington displayed very great bravery, he alone, with his formidable, decapitated three men, who were all killed, and that their scalps as trophies. We know the Captain only needed an opportunity to prove his heroism. Well may the Yankees tremble when he advances.

FROM TEXAS.—GALVESTON UNDER BLOCKADE—VESSELS CAPTURED.—We copy the following extract of Texas news from the N. O. Picayune of the 11th:

We have the Galveston Civilian, extra, of the 3d inst., which thus announces the blockade of that port:

Yesterday forenoon the lookout on Hendley's buildings run up the red flag, a case of drums, and a case of powder, one sail and one steamer beneath, bringing groups of curious observers to the observatory with which Galveston is so well supplied. The men were all in uniform, and a large number taken prisoners. The remainder who landed, are wandering about the woods like scared sheep, and our boys are hunting them in every direction.

These acts of tyranny are the beginning of the end. The right which their exercise presupposes to exist, makes us the subjects and slaves of the despot, not free American citizens.

The State Guard.

The attacks of the allies of "the enemies of the country" on the State Guard is reflected.

In this city, and elsewhere, we are glad to learn the companies are being filled up with good men of both parties, who are content to ignore partisan organizations for the good of the country.

The National Guards of this city, have changed their ranks to Ben Adams Guards, in honor of our esteemed fellow-citizen, Mr. Adams.

The officers are as follows:

D. C. Symmes, Captain; I. S. Bartlett, First Lieutenant; J. F. Price, Second Lieutenant; J. R. Gould, Third Lieutenant.

The company now numbers over fifty active members.

The Courier charges that the Hon. Mr. Holt dislodged the charge of an omnibus driver. Hundreds of the best men and women in this country have acted similarly, when they find that their country is tampered with them. But at no moment in Mr. Holt's life did anything of this kind ever occur to him. He never, at any time, had a dispute of any kind with an omnibus driver.

Does the Journal pretend to say that it did not, about the time Mr. Postmaster-General Holt charged the mails from the Jeffersonville road to the New Albany road, make this charge against him? or, having made it, does it assert that it is untrue?

Moreover, does the Journal remember the reason it assigned for Mr. Holt's action in that case?

We did not say that Mr. Holt demanded pay for causing this State. What we did say, we have good reason to believe is true.

Since writing an article elsewhere published in reference to the Higher Law Conspiracy to plunge Kentucky into war for the benefit of the Administration, we have seen the Cincinnati Gazette of yesterday, in which a long and well-written letter from this city has the following significant expression:

At any rate, this fact is a fixed one, that BAYONETS NOT BALLOTS, are to maintain Kentucky's independence of invading rebellion.

* * * *

If the same kind of speech [as Holt's] can be made in every principal town in the State, and in every town, we will have BAYONETS NOT BALLOTS ready to PROTECT THE POLLS, IN AUGUST, Kentucky may give its verdict in peace, and the people of the State will dare to speak the same language as was uttered by Mr. Holt, the majority in both Houses will be sufficient to do the hands of Magog.

The Journal warns us that they will be held to strict account therefore. We suppose they expect to be so held. But they are not afraid of the chivalrous and honorable young men who hold those guns. They know, all assertions to the contrary notwithstanding, that not one of these guns has been illegally disposed of, or will be improperly used—not one.

LAST ATTEMPTS are constantly being made through the infamous dispatches from Washington to create the impression that General Lee is becoming disengaged and disaffected toward the Confederate cause. We have just conversed with a well known gentleman of this city, who assures us that letters of recent date have been received from Mrs. Lee, which affix the stamp of falsehood upon all such reports.

The Journal complains that Mr. Chief of Police DENT has issued orders to the police to prevent the singing of political songs in the streets, and insists that an exception be made in favor of such songs as it indicates. Of course, Mr. DENT will comply with the Journal's wishes.

DEATH OF HON. J. H. JEWETT.—We are pained to learn that the Hon. J. H. Jewett died suddenly in Shivelyton on Saturday last, whilst on a visit to that place. His remains were brought through this city yesterday, and carried to his residence at Elizabethtown.

Mr. Jewett was a man of fine attainments, a law and great ability, and, for four years represented the 12th District in the Federal Congress. His health has recently been quite failing, and his death, although sudden, was not unlooked for.

THE LEAGUE ZOUAVES.—A company of boys is being organized in the upper part of the city, under the above title. There are now twenty members, who have elected Wm. H. Coyle, their Captain; J. C. Collins, 1st Lieutenant; 2d Lieutenant, Albert Pyles; Orderly Sergeant, John L.

Another Paper Suppressed.

We learn from a correspondent at Saint Louis that a Company of Lincoln's Home Guard mustered on Sunday by suppressing the (California) News. They visited the office in force, threw the type into pit, and into the street, and made the editor march "double quick" at the point of the bayonet.

SHOOTING AT CAMP JO. HOLT.—Yesterday, in a personal affray at the camp across the river, Capt. Isaac Trabue shot Capt. Chase, and struck the ball striking his cap, and glanced along the forehead, slightly inflicting only a trifling wound. There was some rivalry between them in regard to enlisting recruits, which led to the affray.

Major-Gen. Leonidas Polk is in Memphis.—He is at the Gayoso at the Gayoso, and his headquarters are at the Gayoso, and he is to be in the city for a few days.

His arrival will be followed by a general patriotic premium to them, who will have an audience with the General, and the rights of the State Rights.

Complaints by letter to D. F. H., of Gulf Head, Louisville, Ky., July 17.

Another Step.

As we predicted when Mr. Surveyor COTTON began the enforcement of the embargo of the trade of Louisville that they would do, the servants here of the Administration have taken a step forward, and now the trucks of travelers are searched at the Louisville and Nashville Railroad depot, and detained at the will of the depots of Chase's subordinates.

Because goods of some description are suspected to have been sent through to the Confederate States in transit, carpet bags, Mr. COTTON, himself a post office of the Administration, deems it necessary to exercise surveillance over the baggage of travelers as he thinks proper.

There are laws here for this; it is true that the apologists for the Administration can make no argument in defense of this interference with gentlemen's baggage; it is true, it is an exercise of pure tyranny that has brought down on the old world despotism, the anathemas of all Americans who have been abroad; but what cares the Usurper for that? Hasn't he suspended the Constitution? Hasn't he set aside the laws? Hasn't he nullified the decisions of the Courts? Doesn't he command—Twelve Yankees killed and many taken prisoners.

[Correspondence of the Petersburg Express.]

CAMP CAROLINA, NORFOLK, July 1.

Dear Express.—The commandant of men from the Second North Carolina Regiment alluded to by your correspondent "Ingo," in Tuesday's Express, has been heard from. The detached companies of five men, who are the ten companies of the regiment, fifty in all, and were under charge of Lieut. Seppar of the Warren Guards. They were sent to Norfolk, N. C., for the purpose of getting supplies, and were captured, which had been wrecked, from a British vessel, and which ships were often seen closely watching.

The commandant, who said that after the coffee had been removed from the British vessel to our steamer, it was attacked by 200 Yankees in a brisk engagement, all of whom were killed, and a large number taken prisoners. The remainder who landed, are wandering about the woods like scared sheep, and our boys are hunting them in every direction.

The second regiment, Col. J. M. Anderson, is comprised of companies whose Captains are as follows: Capt. Moore, of Covington; Capt. Shadrack, of Madena; Capt. Thompson, Capt. Shadrack, of Lexington; Capt. Staley, of Graves; Capt. Lee, of Butler; Capt. Clegg, of Louisville; Capt. Tamm, of Louisville; Capt. Dewart, of Harrison; Capt. Breckinridge, of Fayette.

Most of these companies are full and are composed of men who have never been to war, and who can handle a gun as skillfully as a squirrel's body.

The second regiment, Col. J. M. Anderson, is comprised of companies whose Captains are as follows: Capt. Johnston, of Marshall; Capt. Plece, of Caldwell; Capt. Shepard, of Union; Capt. Lyon, of Marion; Capt. Crittenden, of Frankfort; Capt. Marshall; Capt. Holt; Capt. Sorrells, of Paducah, and Capt. Bowman.

This regiment is almost entirely from the Kentucky District and presents in the soldiers of the regiment a view of the most heroic and gallant men in the world.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The tents are pitched in a beautiful oak wood, which affords a shelter from the sun, and a place for the men to sleep.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

The camp is located eight or nine miles from Covington, a short distance from the Ohio River, and is situated on a high, rocky, and broken hill, about a mile from the Menard railroad.

LETTER FROM CAMP BOONE.

The Kentucky Regiments C. S. Army

—Where they are from—Who they are—Prince Generosity—Other Regiments to be Received—Terms of Service.

(Correspondence of the Louisville Courier.)

CAMP BOONE, 1

NEAR CLARKSVILLE, TENN., July 14.

Editors Louisville Courier.—Your readers are already aware that that a company of men are already in the Confederate service.

The neutrality of our State has been violated by Lincoln's minions in openly recruiting men from our State.